UNIT 1 What Is Terrorism?

Unit Overview	xvi
---------------	-----

- 1. How to Define Terrorism, Joshua Sinai, Perspectives on Terrorism, April 2008
Joshua Sinai argues that defining terrorism is “the most ambiguous component in terrorism studies.” He proposes a ‘new definition’ that addresses existing ambiguities. 2
- 2. Analyzing and Defining Terrorist Acts: What Types of Attacks Should Be Considered Terrorism?, Fred Burton, Police One News, February 2011
Fred Burton attempts to answer the question: “What types of acts should be defined as terrorism?” He cautions that dismissing certain acts due to a lack of foreign involvement may lead authorities to overlook important information useful in preventing the next attack. 5
- 3. A Critical View of Critical Terrorism Studies, James M. Lutz, Perspectives on Terrorism, December 2010
James Lutz argues that “terror” and “terrorism” should not be used interchangeably, and that all criminal activities are not necessarily terrorism. He believes that the concept of state terrorism has not received sufficient attention from those engaged in Critical Terrorism Studies. 8

UNIT 2 Terrorist Tactics

Unit Overview	14
---------------	----

- 4. Suicide Attacks on the Rise, Captain Billy J. Huntsman, Military Police, 2010
Captain Huntsman argues that suicide attacks “should not be viewed merely as an operational tactic, but as a means to a strategic goal.” He argues that understanding suicide attacks is critical in developing effective countermeasures. 16
- 5. The Al Qaeda Weapons Race Continues, Ed Blanche, The Middle East, May 2008
Ed Blanche provides an overview of Al Qaeda’s efforts to produce weapons of mass destruction. Blanche argues that Al Qaeda’s ability to produce these weapons has been largely underestimated. 18
- 6. Rifling through the Terrorists’ Arsenal: Exploring Groups’ Weapon Choices and Technology Strategies, Brian A. Jackson and David R. Frelinger, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism, 2008
This study provides a comprehensive analysis of the use of weapons, technologies and the variation in technologies used by terrorist groups. It identifies significant differences in the use of weapons, technologies, and related strategies by terrorist organizations. 21

The concepts in bold italics are developed in the article. For further expansion, please refer to the Topic Guide.

UNIT 3 State-Supported Terrorism

Unit Overview

- 7. Rogue Operators, Daniel Byman, The National Interest, July/August 2008

Byman examines the changing dynamics of state-sponsored terrorism. He concludes that the biggest challenge the United States faces is preventing “passive sponsorship” of terrorist organizations by states like Saudi Arabia, Iran, Pakistan, and Lebanon.

36

- 8. No State Sponsors, No Terror, William F. Jasper, The New American, August 2009

Jasper argues that for decades Iran has been the leading sponsor of global terror, followed closely by the KGB and its successor the Russian FSB. He concludes that any genuine effort aimed at eradicating terrorism must ultimately confront its state sponsors.

38

- 9. Nightmares of Nuclear Terrorism, Rolf Mowatt-Larssen, Bulletin of Atomic Scientists, March/April 2010

Mowatt-Larssen outlines various means by which terrorist organizations might acquire nuclear weapons. He explores the potential role of states such as Pakistan and North Korea in the transfer of weapons or weapons technology.

42

47

UNIT 4 International Terrorism

Unit Overview

- 10. A State of Terror, Michael Petrou, Maclean's, July 2009

Michael Petrou examines the role of al-Shabab in Somalia. He argues that while “Somalis are dying from starvation and war, or suffocating under al-Shabab’s interpretation of Islam,” Somalia is becoming the next terrorist stronghold.

52

54

- 11. Greece Will Be a War Zone, Sect of Revolutionaries Warns Tourists, Helena Smith, The Observer, August 2010

Helena Smith examines the recent rise of anarchist organizations in Greece in the wake of a government austerity program. The Sect of Revolutionaries has threatened to turn Greece “into a war zone of revolutionary activity with arson, sabotage, violent demonstrations, bombings and assassinations. . .”

57

- 12. FARC, ELN: Colombia’s Left-Wing Guerrillas, Stephanie Hanson, Council on Foreign Relations, August 2009

Hanson provides a systematic overview of the two main left-wing guerilla groups operating in Colombia. She offers a brief summary of the ongoing peace negotiations between these groups and the Colombian government.

59

- 13. How al Qaeda Works: What the Organization’s Subsidiaries Say about Its Strength, Leah Farrall, Foreign Affairs, March/April 2011

Leah Farrall provides an in-depth analysis of the origins, growth, and structure of al Qaeda. She argues that al Qaeda has the potential for continued growth and remains a major threat.

62

UNIT 5

Terrorism in America

Unit Overview

66

- 14. Militant Extremists in the United States, Jonathan Masters, Council on Foreign Relations, February 2011

Militant extremists pose a unique threat for America and domestic terrorism. Jonathan Masters offers an overview of four basic categories of militant extremists and the domestic intelligence infrastructure developed to address this threat.

68

- 15. NewYorkistan?: Initial Lessons from the Latest Homegrown Terror Plot, Judith Miller, City Journal, June 2010

Judith Miller examines a failed terror plot by two New Jersey natives to illustrate the rising threat of homegrown terror. She argues that New York is not only the number one target, but also becoming the number one source of these terrorists.

71

- 16. Escalating Violence from the Animal Liberation Front, Scott Stewart, Security Weekly, July 29, 2010

Scott Stewart uses the case of a self-described “ALF Lone Wolf” arsonist to examine the increasing use of “leaderless resistance” by left-wing activists in the United States. He argues that ELF/ALF lone wolves “have been more successful in conducting attacks than jihadist lone wolves.”

73

- 17. The Year in Hate and Extremism, 2010, Mark Potok, Intelligence Report, Issue Number 141, Spring 2011

Mark Potok, of the Southern Poverty Law Center, argues that there has been an explosive growth of right-wing extremist groups in the United States. He suggests that in an environment of increasing political polarization, President Obama has served as a lightning rod for radical right anger.

76

UNIT 6

Terrorism and the Media

Unit Overview

78

- 18. Communicating Politics Online: The Rhetoric of “Terrorism” and “Resistance”, Amani Ismail, The Global Media Journal: Mediterranean Edition, Fall 2009

This article argues that the Hezbollah and the Palestinian Islamic Jihad are using the Internet to counteract negative mainstream media images by emphasizing, fostering, and celebrating a culture of resistance.

80

- 19. Paramilitary Groups in Northern Ireland, the Media War and the State: Semantics and Symbiosis—A Comparative Case Study of the PIRA and UDA, Mark Hayes and Paul Norris, International Conference on Conflict, Terrorism and Society, Kadir Has University, Istanbul, 2010

Hayes and Norris cast doubt on the often hypothesized symbiotic relationship between terrorists and the media. They argue rather than relaying the desired terrorist narrative, that media coverage of the conflict between the Provisional Irish Republican Army and Ulster Defense Army “reflected the over-riding policy priorities and political preferences of the state.”

90

- 20. Jihad with a Hip-Hop Pose Is an Easier Sell with Youth, Andrew Potter, Maclean's, July 2008

In order to recruit members among urban youths and to capitalize on cultural alienation among young Blacks, terrorist organizations are using hip-hop music to recruit a new generation of “gangsta jihadis.”

95

21. Online De-Radicalization? Countering Violent Extremist Narratives: Message, Messenger and Media Strategy, Omar Ashour, Perspectives on Terrorism, December 2010

This article outlines the framework of a UN-sponsored research project to counter extremist narratives on the internet. By focusing on the message, the messengers and the media, states may be able to develop a comprehensive strategy for online de-radicalization.

97

UNIT 7 Terrorism and Religion

Unit Overview

100

22. Cracks in the Jihad, Thomas Rid, The Wilson Quarterly, Winter 2010

Thomas Rid examines the increasing divide between local and global jihadis. He argues that despite the 'cracks' in the jihad and the lack of a centralized leadership, self-recruited global jihadis continue to pose a significant threat to U.S. interests.

102

23. In Search of Moderate Muslims, Joshua Muravchik and Charles Szrom, Commentary, February 2008

Muravchik and Szrom discuss the difficulty of identifying moderate Muslim groups which may serve as an antidote to radical Islam. They offer a six question litmus test to identify groups that "merit support and consideration."

107

24. India Must Face up to Hindu Terrorism, Kapil Komireddi, The Guardian, January 19, 2011

Komireddi asserts that the Indian government has largely ignored political violence perpetrated by Hindu extremists. He argues that India "has failed appallingly in its obligations" to its 150 million Muslim citizens.

113

25. Sociological Understanding of the Relationship between Terrorism and Religion, Hüseyin Cinoğlu, International Journal of Human Sciences, Volume 7, Issue: 2, 2010

Cinoğlu argues that religion has been used by terrorist organizations to legitimize violence, to cure alienation, to eliminate the need to appeal to larger groups, and is also used in target selection.

115

UNIT 8 Women and Terrorism

Unit Overview

120

26. Female Suicide Bombers: A Global Trend, Mia Bloom, Daedalus, Winter 2007

Bloom examines the motives of women who choose to become suicide bombers. She discusses potential reasons for recruitment of women by terrorist organizations and concludes that these women are not likely to become "portents of gender equality."

122

27. Picked Last: Women and Terrorism, Alisa Stack-O'Connor, Joint Force Quarterly, Issue 44, 1st Quarter 2007

Alisa Stack-O'Connor examines how and why terrorist organizations use women in their attacks. Focusing on their propaganda value, the obstacles they face and the tactical advantage they provide, she emphasizes the importance of women to terrorist organizations.

128

28. Terrorism in Africa: The Role of Women in Terrorist Groups, Claudia Forster-Towne, Consultancy Africa Intelligence, August 2010

Claudia Forster-Towne argues that "the role of women within terrorist organizations depends largely on the organization's conception of gender." She examines the differing roles of women in terrorist groups in Uganda, Sierra Leone, and Mozambique.

134

The concepts in bold italics are developed in the article. For further expansion, please refer to the Topic Guide.

29. The Moscow Bombing: An Inevitable Victory for Moscow, but a Hard Struggle Ahead, Yossef Bodansky, Defense and Foreign Affairs: Strategy Policy, April 2010

The March 29, 2010 bombings of two Moscow Metro stations were revealed to be the work of the female terrorist group the “Black Widows.” Bodansky explores the Black Widows involvement in the escalating jihadist surge into Russia and the North Caucasus.

137

UNIT 9 Government Response

Unit Overview

142

30. The Jihad against the Jihadis: How Moderate Muslim Leaders Waged War on Extremists—And Won, Fareed Zakaria, Newsweek, February 22, 2010

Fareed Zakaria examines how some Muslim leaders and intellectuals have waged a successful war against extremism by delegitimizing the violent jihad. As a result there has been a significant decline in the number of people who support violence against civilians.

144

31. Detainee Deradicalization: A Challenge for Psychological Science, Arie W. Kruglanski, Michele W. Gelfand, and Rohan Gunaratna, APS Observer, January 2010

This article argues that social psychology can make an important contribution in deradicalizing terrorist detainees. Pointing to the relative success of deradicalization programs in Saudi Arabia, Indonesia and Iraq, the authors advocate the use of cognitive and affective/motivational tests to investigate the role of variables, such as the detainee’s embeddedness, as moderators for deradicalization.

147

32. Enemies, Not Defendants: Let the Law of War Meet the War on Terror, Andrew C. McCarthy, The National Review, January 2010

Focusing on the case of the underwear bomber, McCarthy argues that it is “insane” to look at counterterrorism as law enforcement instead of a national security problem. He argues that by treating prisoners as enemy combatants rather than defendants the U.S. can more effectively interrogate them and prevent future terrorist attacks.

151

UNIT 10 Future Threats

Unit Overview

154

33. The Shifting Face of Violence, Theodor H. Winkler, World Policy Journal, Fall 2008

Winkler provides a broad overview of the challenges posed by the changing face of violence. He argues that states need “integrated strategies that address conflict prevention, conflict management, conflict resolution, and post conflict reconstruction.”

156

34. Al Qaeda at 20 Dead or Alive?, Peter Bergen, The Washington Post, August 17, 2008

Peter Bergen predicts that al Qaeda is unlikely to attack the United States in the next five years and that while al Qaeda’s media war for the hearts and minds continues, “Muslims around the world are increasingly taking a dim view of this group.”

160

35. The Future of Terrorism, John T. Picarelli, National Institute of Justice Journal, Issue No. 264, November 2009

John Picarelli identifies important differences in how Bruce Hoffman and Marc Sageman, two of the foremost experts on terrorism in the United States, interpret the nature of the terrorist threat. He argues that law enforcement agencies can offer valuable insights as key contributors to this debate.
