1. According to Coulomb's Law for Magnetism, the force between magnetic poles is an inverse square law. Thus if the distance between the poles is doubled the force is changed by a factor of $1/r^2$ or, in this case, by a factor of $1/(2)^2 = 1/4$. Doubling the separation distance reduces the force to one-fourth its original value.