

Contents

---

Preface

xviii

---

I An introduction to counselling

---

Introduction	1
Stories of counselling	2
Paula's story: coming to terms with trauma	2
Myra's story: being depressed	3
Matthew's story: everything is getting on top of me	3
Laura's story: finding the right counsellor	4
What is counselling?	4
Defining counselling	7
The relationship between counselling and psychotherapy	8
Counselling and other helping professions	8
The diversity of theory and practice in counselling	10
The aims of counselling	12
Counselling as an interdisciplinary area of study	13
A user-centred definition of counselling	14
Conclusions	16
Chapter summary	17
Topics for reflection and discussion	17
Key terms and concepts	18
Suggested further reading	19

2	The cultural and historical origins of counselling	20
	Introduction	20
	The emergence of the 'trade in lunacy'	21
	The invention of psychotherapy	24
	The growth of psychotherapy in the USA	26
	The secularization of society	28
	The role of Carl Rogers	29
	Therapy as a response to the 'empty self'	30
	The expansion of counselling in the late twentieth century	31
	The social meaning of counselling	33
	Images of the person implicit in counselling approaches	36
	Conclusions	37
	Chapter summary	38
	Topics for reflection and discussion	39
	Key terms and concepts	39
	Suggested further reading	40
3	Counselling theories: diversity and convergence	41
	Introduction	42
	What is a theory?	43
	Theory as a structured set of ideas	43
	Theory as a set of social practices	45
	The purpose of theory: explanation or understanding?	47
	Why do we need theory? The uses of conceptualization in counselling practice	49
	Something to hang on to: the need of the counsellor for structure in the face of chaos	49
	Offering the client a way of making sense	50
	Establishing professional status	50
	The creation of knowledge communities	50
	The diversity of theorizing in counselling	52
	Alternative 'images of the person'	52
	The personal dimension of theory	53
	The social context of theory construction	53
	The mental health industry: brand names and special ingredients	54
	The underlying unity of approaches to counselling	55
	'Common' or 'non-specific' therapeutic factors	55
	The movement towards theoretical integration	60
	The debate over the merits of integrated versus 'pure' approaches	61
	Eclecticism and integrationism	64

---

Pathways to integration	65
The use of client assessment in integrative approaches	66
The use of 'transtheoretical' concepts in integrative approaches	67
The missing dimension: counsellor development	69
The future of integration	70
Conclusions: counselling theories – tools or truths?	72
Chapter summary	73
Topics for reflection and discussion	75
Key terms and concepts	76
Suggested further reading	76
4 Themes and issues in the psychodynamic approach to counselling	78
<hr/>
Introduction	78
The origins of psychodynamic counselling: the work of Sigmund Freud	79
The childhood origins of emotional problems	80
The importance of the 'unconscious'	82
The therapeutic techniques used in psychoanalysis	83
The post-Freudian evolution of the psychodynamic approach	87
The object relations school	89
The origins of object relations theory in child observation	89
The application of an object relations perspective in therapy	90
The British Independents: the importance of counter-transference	95
The American post-Freudian tradition: ego psychology and self theory	98
The European tradition	99
Attachment theory	100
Psychodynamic counselling within a time-limited framework	106
The conversational model	113
An appraisal of the psychodynamic approach to counselling	117
Chapter summary	118
Topics for reflection and discussion	120
Key terms and concepts	120
Suggested further reading	121
5 From behaviourism to constructivism: the cognitive–behavioural approach to counselling	122
<hr/>
Introduction	122
The origins of the cognitive–behavioural approach	123

---

The application of behavioural ideas in clinical practice	125
Behavioural methods in counselling	126
The cognitive strand	132
Cognitive processes	133
Cognitive content	136
The techniques and methods of cognitive-behavioural counselling	138
An appraisal of the cognitive-behavioural approach to counselling	141
The constructivist revolution	143
Solution-focused therapy	146
Conclusions	152
Chapter summary	153
Topics for reflection and discussion	154
Key terms and concepts	154
Suggested further reading	155
6 Theory and practice of the person-centred approach	156
<hr/>
Introduction	156
The evolution of the person-centred approach	157
The image of the person in person-centred theory	163
The therapeutic relationship	166
Empathy	169
Congruence and presence	174
The therapeutic process	177
Experiential focusing	179
The process-experiential model of therapy	180
An appraisal of the person-centred approach	184
Chapter summary	187
Topics for reflection and discussion	188
Key terms and concepts	188
Suggested further reading	188
7 Working with systems	190
<hr/>
Introduction	190
Understanding human systems	191
The analysis and treatment of family systems	193

---

The concept of the person's social 'niche'	199
The counsellor as consultant: working with organizational systems	199
Conclusions: themes and issues in the application of systemic ideas in counselling	201
Chapter summary	202
Topics for reflection and discussion	203
Key terms and concepts	204
Suggested further reading	204
8 Feminist approaches: the radicalization of counselling	205
<hr/>
Introduction	205
Feminism as philosophy and social action	206
The feminist critique of psychotherapy theory and practice	208
Theory and practice of feminist counselling	213
Integrationist approaches	213
The Stone Center model of feminist counselling	214
Radical feminist therapy	217
Therapist as outlaw: the need for a feminist ethics	219
Conclusions: issues in feminist counselling	221
Chapter summary	222
Topics for reflection and discussion	223
Key terms and concepts	224
Suggested further reading	224
9 Narrative approaches to counselling: working with stories	225
<hr/>
Introduction	225
Competing ways of understanding narrative	226
Psychodynamic approaches to narrative	227
Cognitive/constructivist approaches to narrative	230
Social constructionist narrative therapy	234
Externalizing the problem	235
Enlisting community resources and audiences	238
Conclusions	240
Chapter summary	241
Topics for reflection and discussion	242

Key terms and concepts	242
Suggested further reading	242
<hr/>
10 Multiculturalism as an approach to counselling	243
<hr/>
Introduction	243
What do we mean by 'culture'?	244
Underlying cultural aspects	246
The concept of reality	246
The sense of self	247
The construction of morality	248
The concept of time	250
The significance of place	251
Externally observable cultural aspects	251
Multicultural counselling in practice	254
Cultural awareness training for counsellors	259
Adapting existing services and agencies to meet the needs of client groups from different cultures	263
Creating new specialist agencies	265
Promoting research into multicultural counselling	266
Conclusions	266
Chapter summary	267
Topics for reflection and discussion	268
Key terms and concepts	269
Suggested further reading	269
<hr/>
11 Philosophical counselling	270
<hr/>
Introduction: the relevance of philosophy for counselling and psychotherapy	270
The range and scope of philosophical analysis	272
Existential psychotherapy as a philosophical approach	273
Philosophical counselling	277
Postmodern therapy	283
The value of conceptual analysis for counsellors and psychotherapists	284
Conclusions	289
Chapter summary	290
Topics for reflection and discussion	291
Key terms and concepts	291
Suggested further reading	291

12	The counselling relationship	293
	Introduction: the counselling relationship as a key theme in contemporary theory and practice	293
	Images of the therapeutic relationship	297
	The psychoanalytic concept of transference: therapist as container	298
	Creating the conditions for growth: therapist as authentic presence	300
	Therapist as teacher, coach, scientist and philosopher	302
	The 'not-knowing' stance: therapist as editor	303
	Integrative models: the all-purpose therapist	304
	The practicalities of relationship competence: how to develop an effective therapeutic alliance	307
	Adopting a collaborative style: being congruent and using metacommunication	308
	Repairing ruptures in the alliance	308
	The embodiment of the relationship: transition objects	310
	The concept of boundary	311
	Measuring the therapeutic relationship	314
	The role of money in the relationship	316
	Implications of relationship theories for counsellor training and development	318
	Conclusions: the complexity of the therapeutic relationship	320
	Chapter summary	320
	Topics for reflection and discussion	321
	Key terms and concepts	322
	Suggested further reading	322
13	The process of counselling	324
	Introduction: defining the concept of process	324
	The process of counselling: beginnings and endings	327
	Negotiating expectations	327
	Assessment	329
	Establishing a working alliance	334
	Ending counselling	335
	The middle part of counselling: the process of change	339
	Assimilation of problematic experiences	339
	Change events	343
	Using structured exercises and interventions	343
	What do counsellors do? Process defined in terms of counsellor behaviour and intentions	344
	The covert dimension of process: what is going on behind the scenes	345

---

	Towards a comprehensive analysis of process: bringing it all together	347
	Conclusions: making sense of process	349
	Chapter summary	350
	Topics for reflection and discussion	351
	Key terms and concepts	351
	Suggested further reading	352
14	The politics of counselling: empowerment, control and difference	353

---

	Introduction	354
	The nature of social and interpersonal power	354
	The institutionalization of power and oppression in counselling	356
	The language and concepts of counselling	357
	The counsellor as an agent of social control	358
	Control of space, territory and time	359
	Differential access to services	360
	Corruption of friendship	360
	Counselling with economically disadvantaged people	361
	Power and control in counselling with lesbians, gay men and bisexual people	365
	Counselling and religious commitment	371
	Other disadvantaged and marginalized groups	374
	Principles of anti-oppressive practice in counselling	374
	Developing a critique of mainstream, 'majority' theory and practice	375
	Empowerment and emancipation as goals of counselling	375
	Developing a user-friendly approach to counselling	377
	Conclusions	379
	Chapter summary	379
	Topics for reflection and discussion	380
	Key terms and concepts	381
	Suggested further reading	381
15	Morals, values and ethics in counselling practice	382

---

	Introduction	382
	Values in counselling	386
	Ethics and moral reasoning	387
	Personal intuition	388
	Ethical guidelines developed by professional organizations	388
	Ethical principles	391

---

General moral theories	393
Applying moral principles and ethical codes: from theory to practice	395
Whose agent is the counsellor?	396
How far should the client be pushed or directed? The use of persuasion, suggestion and challenge	399
Dual relationships	401
Sexual exploitation of clients	402
Ethical issues involved in the use of touch	406
Strategies for maintaining ethical standards	410
Conclusions	413
Chapter summary	413
Topics for reflection and discussion	414
Key terms and concepts	415
Suggested further reading	415
16 The organizational context of counselling	416
<hr/>
Introduction	416
Types of counselling organization	417
The nature of counselling organizations	420
Organizational culture	421
Institutional defence mechanisms	422
Parallel process	424
The developmental history of the agency	424
Role conflict	425
The role of the paraprofessional or voluntary counsellor	426
Organizational stress and burnout	428
Stability of funding	430
Conclusions	430
Chapter summary	431
Topics for reflection and discussion	432
Key terms and concepts	433
Suggested further reading	433
17 Alternative modes of delivery	434
<hr/>
Introduction	434
Time-limited counselling	435
Non-professional counsellors	437
Telephone counselling	440
Counselling on the Internet	442

	Reading and writing as therapy	443
	Group counselling and therapy	445
	Self-help groups	449
	Couples counselling	450
	Conclusions	453
	Chapter summary	453
	Topics for reflection and discussion	454
	Key terms and concepts	455
	Suggested further reading	455
<hr/>
18	The role of research in counselling and therapy	456
	Introduction	456
	Outcome and evaluation research	458
	Process research	463
	Studies of process from a client-centred perspective	464
	Studies of process from a psychodynamic perspective	465
	The 'events paradigm'	466
	The process as experienced by the client	467
	Case studies	468
	Ethical dilemmas in counselling research	470
	The problem of reactivity	471
	The relevance of research for practitioners	472
	The relationship between theory and research	474
	The image of the person in therapy research	474
	Chapter summary	475
	Topics for reflection and discussion	476
	Key terms and concepts	476
	Suggested further reading	476
<hr/>
19	The skills and qualities of the effective counsellor	478
	Introduction	478
	Interpersonal skill	480
	Personal beliefs and attitudes	482
	Conceptual ability	483
	Personal 'soundness'	483
	Mastery of technique	485
	Ability to understand and work within social systems	488
	Openness to inquiry	489
	The counsellor's journey: a developmental model of counsellor competence	489

---

Chapter summary	493
Topics for reflection and discussion	494
Key terms and concepts	495
Suggested further reading	495
20 Training and supervision in counselling	496
<hr/>
Introduction	496
Historical trends in counsellor training	497
Key elements in counsellor training courses	498
Theoretical frameworks	498
Counselling skills	499
Work on self	501
Professional issues	503
Supervised practice	503
Research awareness	504
Issues and dilemmas in counsellor training	504
Selection of trainees	505
The assessment of counsellor competence	505
Supervision	507
Training and supervision in counselling: some conclusions	512
Chapter summary	514
Topics for reflection and discussion	515
Key terms and concepts	516
Suggested further reading	516
21 Beyond an introduction: continuing the conversation	517
<hr/>
Introduction	517
Key issues in counselling theory and practice	518
The tension between the individual and the collective: autonomy/freedom versus relatedness/belonging	518
The nature of power and influence	519
Location of identity in time and history	520
The significance of body experience	520
The basis for knowledge, truth and moral action	521
Where counselling has been: the past 50 years	522
Where counselling is going: the next 50 years	524
References	528
Index	588